Washington, D. C., Aug. 27.—[Special.]—The International Medical Congress which meets here Sept. 7 will be the greatest gathering of doctors ever known, after the opening session it will be divided into eight sections, similar to the divisions of the National Academy. Convention events will be in Chicago. These various sections will discuss different branches of the medical profession. In all of these papers will be read by the foremost men in the medical world. The local physicians are now busily engaged in preparing for the entertainment of 1,000 or 1,500 professional guests who are expected. In the first day or two it is expected by the local men the greater part of the attendance of Washington and over end of the city. A reception and banquet, a trip to Mount Vernon, and an excursion of the foreign visitors to Virginia Hot and Niagara Falls have been arranged, and possibly other excursions of importance will be added. The programme of papers to be presented embraces a wide variety of topics. A GARDEN PARTY AT SARATOGA.

The Entertaining Affair of the Season and a Brilliant Success.

Saratoga, N. Y., Aug. 27.—[Special.]—The perfect party at the Grand Union Hotel this afternoon and evening was the entertainment of the season, and was a grand success spoken of. There were 2,000 invitations issued, and from the looks of the multitude present there could not possibly have been many who could not have had an invitation. The management of private parties during the week at the Grand Union, Grand Central, and Congress Hall, and at the Spring City Hotel deserves special praise.

Friday morning Mr. and Mrs. David Stewart entertained Gen. Sheridan, Gen. Rucker, and a large company of guests at a lunch at their cottage, "Woodlawn." Mrs. Stewart was assisted in receiving by Miss Emma Stewart, Miss Mary Stewart, Miss Lizzie Wilder, and Miss Ellen Wilder, of Chicago.

Thursday morning Mr. and Mrs. Stewart entertained at breakfast at their cottage, "Woodlawn," Gen. Sheridan, Gen. Rucker, Mr. and Mrs. Potter Palmer, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Wilder, and Mr. and Mrs. Ellen Wilder, of Chicago.

BAD WHEAT IN ELEVATORS

One Thing Known and Aware of the Government Has Not.

Board of Trade Men Who Think that Carrying Out Which the Chicago Charges Is Instrumental to the Best Interests of the Chicago Market—Also Action in the Investigation—Something About the Methods of Receiving, Weighing and Grading Grain at the Elevators.

The statements of THE TRIBUNE on the existence of wheat in a condition of the elevators here which, during the week, a great deal of discussion on the subject among the farmers on 'Change and among others who are interested in the matter. There was no generality, as shown on the part of those who have the facts to conceal them, but many of the traders asserted that there was not "enough to a week," and that the less said about the matter the better for the market. THE TRIBUNE'S sources has been the opposite of this. It has repeatedly asserted that there was in store here a quantity of wheat that had been stored over the grain through by and turned over from time to time in order to pass muster on No. 2, and that this wheat kept in bad on the market, and that it should be graded out of an even or grading.

In order to obtain these facts have attempts to examine these proceedings, and interviews with Board of Trade men have been sought. Many declined to talk, some were out "out" while in Chicago elevators. THE TRIBUNE has made as much change and does not wish to be understood that there is any wrong doing, but it is claimed, however, that there are a lot of elevators in this city that need geographical position on the tracks that they should grade for the through changes, and that there is not such a thing as a market in which the buyer and seller are brought together as in the Board of Trade. Many of the traders are dissatisfied with the present system of inspection, and believe that a change would be for the better. $10,000 WORTH OF LACE.

COST OF THE TROUSSEAU OF ALBA ASTOR'S DAUGHTER.

Most Elaborate Wash Dresses Ever Imported—The Largest Set Ever Worn—A Fur-Lined Dress Ordered by Cathedral Windows—The Jewels with a Silk Sash Given Her the Second Day on the Seattle Steamer.

New York, Aug. 27.—[Special.]—Miss Astor's wedding is very lucky. The trousseau will cost no more than a month ago, for the dresses of the bride's sister are to be in keeping with hers. Any doubt entertained by the public that the wedding will be a grand one will be dispelled when it is known that the trousseau alone will cost $10,000. George Lewis might easily have $10,000 worth of lace on his wife's wedding dress, but there is no reason why she should. Considering the grandeur of the great ecclesiastical edifice in which the ceremony is to be performed, it is not necessary that the bride should be loaded down with lace. Besides, the dress will be worn but once, and it is not likely that Mrs. George Lewis will ever have another occasion to wear a wedding dress. Miss Astor's wedding dress is to be of white satin, with a long train, and the bodice will be trimmed with point lace. The sleeves will be of lace, and the veil will be of the same material, and will be worn over the face. The veil will be fastened with diamond pins, and will be worn in the fashion of a mantilla. The orange blossoms will be worn in a wreath, and will be placed on the head in the form of a coronet. The wreath will be composed entirely of natural blossoms, and will be made in Paris. The bouquet will be composed entirely of lilies of the valley, and will be carried in the hand. The bridesmaids will wear white satin dresses, with trains, and will carry bouquets of white roses. The bridesmaids will wear white satin hats, trimmed with white ostrich feathers, and will carry parasols to match their dresses. The bridesmaids will wear gold bracelets, which will be presented to them by the bride. The bracelets will be set with diamonds, and will have the initials of the bride and bridesmaids engraved on them. The bridesmaids will wear gold lockets, which will be presented to them by the bride. The lockets will be set with diamonds, and will have the initials of the bride and bridesmaids engraved on them. The bridesmaids will wear gold watches, which will be presented to them by the bride. The watches will be set with diamonds, and will have the initials of the bride and bridesmaids engraved on them. SHERIFF'S BANKER GETTYSBURG.

The great disturbance, brought the courtesy of the New York Police an exhaustive analysis of the sentence of the Hon. Solomon Hassell's forthcoming romance in the Saturday Telegraph, which he performs to have found weighty moral value in the first and second parts of Canto IV. in the tale of Ida. It was futile to withdraw the impression why Shakespeare did not write the plays and why Bacon did, the discovery and elaboration of the cipher and the narrative is revealed.

Professor views the matter may scientific of Mr. Hassell's theories on his supposition opportunely, it will at least be conceded that he has written a more ingenious and entertaining contribution to the Bacon vs. Shakespeare literature than any of the professionals—Professor Wise Rains, Parvis, Judge Holmes, Thompson, Morgan, or Dick. It will be especially valuable for its exhaustive collection of everything that has to said pro and con on the Baconian theory and against Shakespeare, though it might prove a more dangerous piece of concealment to examine the Bard of Avon, from the Hassell point of view at last. It is evident he has an acquaintance for Shakespeare, which he declares to have been a thoroughly uneducated and ignorant man, a person of the most possible moral character, addicted to almost all to the calendar, and a man who spent his time in a succession of rows and dust from beer shops. He shows that he had no library, that there is no evidence he ever owned a book, that none of the editions of the plays ever belonged to him, that there is not a manuscript or a letter of his in existence, and that he did not know how to spell his own name.

In the other hand, Mr. Hassell establishes that the writer of these plays was a scholar, a philosopher, and a poet, and that Bacon was all these, that Bacon was having to turn written works in concealment, and that they appeared with other names than his own, that a poet would have made some allusion in the essays of his known friendship to Shakspeare, that there is no reference to Shakspeare in the poets, not plenty of references to Mr. Bacon, Bacon's known fame, to Bacon and Italy not on the day, whereas Shakspeare was never out of England, that Bacon was an aristocrat who imported the idea to which Shakspeare re-sented, that he was a student of the Essex faction, of which Bacon was the leader, that he visited the Earl of Southampton and acted with an Old Bacon, that he was a Protestant and hated Elizabeth, fought for Reformation an Old Bacon, whereas Shakspeare died a Papist, and that he wanted to hate the Queen, and that Bacon was associated with pirates, took part in performances, had an intimate knowledge of a treatment, and the best of reasons for concealing the authorship.

The readers are already intensely familiar with the cipher theory, which is original with Mr. Donnelly. He was first led to consider it by the knowledge that Bacon had invented a cryptogram, that he used secret ink, that he was correspondence and was believed to have used them in literary work, and that he highly commended their usefulness. We are not informed, however, that there was anything beyond a mere surmise that he employed this cipher to share. Mr. Donnelly apparently assumed this fact and then hunted for the cipher. He must not find it in one of the modern editions, but the engravings, typographies, and peculiar lettering of the folio editions of 1623 led him to believe it to be there, and after much search he finds it in "Henry IV.," and then no ingenious mathematician who writes with certainty on the deepest of the profoundest matter, he constructs the remarkable narrative in which Bacon, Shakespeare, Queen Lear, Harry Percy, and the Queen on the principal personages, and which underlies the text of "Henry IV." It is not for such as we to say that the cipher will convey Judge upon the Donnelly cipher on sense, that they will challenge its genuineness, the correctness of its construction, and the application of its methods, and that there are many weak points in the argument; the Bacon's authorship and against Shakespeare, which will also be asserted, though they are on the advantage of the mystery surrounding everything connected with the latter. There will remain to be a suspicion also that Donnelly was playing the part of Julius Verne, and that the Baconian cryptogram, like Poe's "Gold Bug" and other works of that king, is more in the intellectual diversion, for did he not also write "Atlantis" and "Ragnarok" Professor Mr. Donnelly may prove to the contrary, there will be many who will accept his published assertion as to a matter of opinion, and who will be content to leave such a point of controversy undecided.

It was futile to withdraw the impression why Shakespeare did not write the plays and why Bacon did, the discovery and elaboration of the cipher and the narrative is revealed.

Professor views the matter may scientific of Mr. Donnelly's theories on his supposition opportunely, it will at least be conceded that he has written a more ingenious and entertaining contribution to the Bacon vs. Shakespeare literature than any of the professionals—Professor Wise Rains, Parvis, Judge Holmes, Thompson, Morgan, or Dick. It will be especially valuable for its exhaustive collection of everything that has to said pro and con on the Baconian theory and against Shakespeare, though it might prove a more dangerous piece of concealment to examine the Bard of Avon, from the Donnelly point of view at last. It is evident he has an acquaintance for Shakespeare, which he declares to have been a thoroughly uneducated and ignorant man, a person of the most possible moral character, addicted to almost all to the calendar, and a man who spent his time in a succession of rows and dust from beer shops. He shows that he had no library, that there is no evidence he ever owned a book, that none of the editions of the plays ever belonged to him, that there is not a manuscript or a letter of his in existence, and that he did not know how to spell his own name.

On the other hand, Mr. Donnelly establishes that the writer of these plays was a scholar, a philosopher, and a poet, and that Bacon was all these, that Bacon was having to turn written works in concealment, and that they appeared with other names than his own, that a poet would have made some allusion in the essays of his known friendship to Shakspeare, that there is no reference to Shakspeare in the poets, not plenty of references to Mr. Bacon, Bacon's known fame, to Bacon and Italy not on the day, whereas Shakspeare was never out of England, that Bacon was an aristocrat who imported the idea to which Shakspeare resented, that he was a student of the Essex faction, of which Bacon was the leader, that he visited the Earl of Southampton and acted with an Old Bacon, that he was a Protestant and hated Elizabeth, fought for Reformation an Old Bacon, whereas Shakspeare died a Papist, and that he wanted to hate the Queen, and that Bacon was associated with pirates, took part in performances, had an intimate knowledge of a treatment, and the best of reasons for concealing the authorship.

The readers are already intensely familiar with the cipher theory, which is original with Mr. Donnelly. He was first led to consider it by the knowledge that Bacon had invented a cryptogram, that he used secret ink, that he was correspondence and was believed to have used them in literary work, and that he highly commended their usefulness. We are not informed, however, that there was anything beyond a mere surmise that he employed this cipher to share. Mr. Donnelly apparently assumed this fact and then hunted for the cipher. He must not find it in one of the modern editions, but the engravings, typographies, and peculiar lettering of the folio editions of 1623 led him to believe it to be there, and after much search he finds it in "Henry IV.," and then no ingenious mathematician who writes with certainty on the deepest of the profoundest matter, he constructs the remarkable narrative in which Bacon, Shakespeare, Queen Lear, Harry Percy, and the Queen on the principal personages, and which underlies the text of "Henry IV." It is not for such as we to say that the cipher will convey Judge upon the Donnelly cipher on sense, that they will challenge its genuineness, the correctness of its construction, and the application of its methods, and that there are many weak points in the argument; the Bacon's authorship and against Shakespeare, which will also be asserted, though they are on the advantage of the mystery surrounding everything connected with the latter. There will remain to be a suspicion also that Donnelly was playing the part of Julius Verne, and that the Baconian cryptogram, like Poe's "Gold Bug" and other works of that king, is more in the intellectual diversion, for did he not also write "Atlantis" and "Ragnarok" Professor Mr. Donnelly may prove to the contrary, there will be many who will accept his published assertion as to a matter of opinion, and who will be content to leave such a point of controversy undecided.

THE STREET CAR.

The greater evil of current thought is pessimistic. The spirit, in its work [illegible] is reserved [illegible] a strong assault on the transgressor most. Sir John Lubbock, eminent scientist has dedicate enthusiasm, devoted the last to check this tendency. Under the head of "Pleasures of Life" he takes upon the duty of happiness and the happiness of duty, the pleasures of travel and of staying at home, the blessedness of friendship with its responsibilities and the exercise of solitude, singing the changes on the familiar phase of Wordsworth to a complement if not particularly enlivening way, saying the habit of looking on the bright and merry side of life as a matter of circumstance.

The theory with Lubbock, while leading to the gravy morals and light of this optimism that Mr. John has too good sub to belong to the Lowest few writers all that agony can [illegible] with strength intelligence and judgment to make the possession of a fortune [illegible]

REAL ESTATE GOING UP.

NATIONAL CAPITAL LOOKS TO A STEADY INCREASE OF VALUES.

How the City Purchases in Lots Has Run Up the Value of Acres for Miles Around—What the Real Value Is Said to Be—Some Points Made Clear to Local Men Concerning the Public Improvements Proposed—Building a New York Line.

The daily receipts of transfers are about an index of increasing features in our city real estate trade in Chicago, and current reports have been made to show that exchanges of realty, as well as for an entire population are enormous. The boom was a reality to come in the country for business holdings last week. Many people are getting back from their vacations, and their contact with persons and things in other parts of the country has given them a stronger conviction than they ever had before that Chicago realty is an investment as well as one to hold. Most of the dealers reported a marked increase in the demand for lots for general property. There are certain investors who persistently refuse to look at anything else, and they are busy looking all they find something to buy into that they can buy within the limits of what they consider a reasonable price. This process is steadily bringing the opportunity to many which the best experts have been looking for and which is another type sure not on the basis of investment. One of these gentlemen says that will be reached within two years. His prediction is accompanied by a well known fact that prices for realty in this city have been low, and that the rates for money and the forces making for high prices are now stronger than they were two years ago. There are properties in New York which are held on a basis of 6½ per cent, and their owners have no fear of the permanency of some of the very best down town property in Boston and other cities. There is no question that the values of Chicago realty are now on a basis which will be maintained, and which will be increased. Many people who have been waiting for a decline in prices are now buying, and the tendency is toward higher rates than ever before. The following are some of the transfers recorded yesterday, Aug. 23:

The other day the office of the Superintendent of Buildings was crowded all the forenoon with persons who had come to get permits for the erection of buildings, and during the whole day there were many callers. The work will be pushed with vigor, and the chief clerk says that the number of permits issued this month will be much greater than in August, 1889, when 1,200 were issued. The value of the buildings for which permits were issued in August, 1889, was $1,500,000. The value of those for which permits have been issued this month will be $2,000,000. The following permits were issued yesterday:

Universal Politeness.

Pat Mat Hanlon: "The courteous young gentleman in even bad night's labor," writes a correspondent under date of Aug. 1, "about Mr. Ira Wirth and myself have become evidences of characteristic. The terminus of the car used to have passage to several residents in Hyde Park, and Wirth and I, after a hard night's work, would ride home on the platform. Mr. Wirth would get off at his home, and I would ride on to the end of the line. Then I would get off and walk back to the car barn. Mr. Wirth would then get on the car and ride to the end of the line, and I would get off and walk back to the car barn. This continued for several months, and I never knew Mr. Wirth to get off the car at any time except when I was on the car with him. He is a gentleman of the old school, and I shall always remember him as such."

A UNION WITH CANADA.

GRAVES WORLD'S SPEECH IN FAVOR OF RECIPROCITY.

Special Commercial Dollar Sales to the Agricultural Parts of Advancing the Better Relations Our Farmers and the Dominion—Our Farmers Sure Profits Between the Two Great Regions—The Fashion Sheet Holds Every Interest to the Nation.

Detroit, Mich., Aug. 23.—(Special.)—On motion of all the business men's associations of Detroit, including the Board of Trade and Merchants' Exchange, Senator Wilson of New York consented to address a mixed meeting at the Detroit Opera House tonight on the subject of commercial union with Canada. Mr. Wilson brought with him Benjamin Butterworth of Ohio, and Fred Andrew Seelie of Toronto, guests that arrived to hold a day. The house was largely attended, the Senator confirming into the lobby and was thunderously complimented by the gubernatorial reception of the town. There was a full representation of citizens and a large number of guests from Windsor, Sandwich, Essex Center, and other near Canada Counties. Charles Hendrie presided and on the platform accompanied Senator Wilson were guests of the State. Letters of sympathy with the movement were received and read from Chicago and elsewhere.

Congressman William C. Redfield of Brooklyn opened the meeting by introducing a series of resolutions setting forth the material advantages accruing to the two countries if commercial union could be consummated, and declaring it to be the sense and desire of the meeting that a commercial union be earnestly striven for and adopted at the very earliest possible moment. The reading of these resolutions was postponed by the vote of the meeting Mr. Wilson was then introduced. He was warmly received, and began at once to read his address, which occupied about two hours in delivery. He spoke for an hour and forty-five minutes, and although the address proceeded at a leisurely pace, was constantly applauded, and was apparently followed by the audience with rapt attention.

Senator Wilson began by saying that the question of reciprocity between the United States and Canada was not a new one. It had been discussed for many years, and had been the subject of treaties and negotiations. He referred to the fact that Mr. Blaine, as an ambassador, had attempted to secure a treaty between the United States and Canada, and that Mr. Cleveland, as President, had also made an effort to secure a treaty. He said that the Canadians had been willing to make a treaty, but that the United States Senate had refused to ratify it. He said that the Canadians had been willing to do their part of the work, but that the United States Senate had refused to do its part. He said that the Canadians had been willing to do their part of the work, but that the United States Senate had refused to do its part. Hoadley and Sawtelle, the Last Fourth Representatives, Fail to Keep Their Agreements—The Committee of the Directors Have Come with the Big Deal Supporting Money to Sawtelle's Assignment—Another of the Clique on the Board—The Call Board Adjourned for an Indefinite Time.

San Francisco, Cal., Aug. 23.—The announcement was made at 11:30 o'clock this morning that Sawtelle and Hoadley had not agreed as to terms which are now their representatives to accept of those imposed them and the call board was at once adjourned, without any other formal official. This is accepted as a complete collapse of the wheat ring, and what effect it will have on the wheat is not yet known. The full significance of the single word "adjourned" as applied to the call board will probably not be known for several days. While Sawtelle and Hoadley, were supposed to be acting for John W. Mackay, James C. Flood, and others of the large stockholders of the Nevada Bank, the latter did not seem to have come out and completely sever connection openly with them without any additional guarantees. When the latter took it Sawtelle and Hoadley agreed to pay the different salaries $1.07 and $1.10 per centum, or about one cent per bushel, in full and that is the price of wheat that stability to $1.10 for the last crop year was supposed to be able to carry the big load, and the announcement was made this morning that the new committee of the seven would be met on terms. A Special Student Tells the Minnesota Association and Is Severely Censured for His Arguments—Some Sought to Be Demonstrated in "The Great Cryptogram"—How Mark Twain's Authorship Is Claimed to Be Revealed Through the Understanding of an Ingenious System.

New York, Aug. 27.—[Special.]—In answering the proposition of the University Extension Society that "World of Knowledge" says: "The supporters of Mr. Ignatius Donnelly's Shakespearian claims and the no less earnest Shakespearian critics, who do not fail to understand philosophical distinctions, propose to invite the lover of a controversy that will be accountable to the history of literature and the stage, in support of the proposition that the Francis Bacon was the real author of the so-called Shakespearian plays. Mr. Donnelly contends an array of evidence that no one can be ignorant. Prof. Thomas Davidson, secretary of the Shakespearian and a staffer at the Association, has invited Mr. Donnelly to appear and submit his claims in behalf of the world and its readers. He has invited Mr. Donnelly at his home at Hastings, Minn., and to the first person affected from access to the latter's manuscripts and proofs, and the first to obtain the actual workings of the system have been explained. Mr. Davidson presents a report of various lectures, and an complete an examination would permit. The article is illustrated, and accompanied by sketches of Mr. Donnelly's home and the library of the Bacon family. Mr. Davidson is well known on both sides of the Atlantic as a keen and erudite scholar, philosopher, and lecturer, and the conclusion that he arrives at is the unprejudiced opinion only of the place has been seriously shaken, the importance of Mr. Donnelly's work. Whatever may be the final judgment upon the Donnelly theory it must be admitted that the student brought forward an extensive investigation itself, and the evidence with from the Baconian cryptogram, presented with interest to the literary world. Mr. Donnelly's theories of Shakespeare's plays and sonnets are as follows:

DONNELLY'S WORK.

The Argument to Show that Shakespeare Did Not Write the Plays.

Those books and other passages Mr. Donnelly came to the conclusion that Bacon might very well have concealed a system into the plays both in order to conceal his name to them and to reserve some part of the meaning for future generations and the benefit of mankind by placing it beyond a risk. The next step, accordingly, was to look for a cipher in the plays. And this began on the theory of cipher discovery of the system, which will be the chief and most original feature of Mr. Donnelly's forthcoming work.

But it will be no answer to the only interesting feature of that work, and that is not that Mr. Donnelly adduced the most conclusive evidence to establish the cryptogram of the work, and sought to do that statement to him all independently with respect to any part of it. The work, which will be "The Great Cryptogram: Francis Bacon's Cipher in the So-Called Shakespeare Plays," consists of two parts—the first containing "The Argument," the second "The Demonstration." The former includes all the evidence, circumstantial and other, which Mr. Donnelly has been able to accumulate in favor of the Baconian theory, apart from the cipher; the latter, the history of the cipher discovery and a portion of the cipher narrative. And here it seems fitting to say with the utmost emphasis that the Baconian theory does not, and will not, stand or fall with Mr. Donnelly's cipher. Of course, if the cipher be successfully answered, the evidence of the authorship of the plays is set at rest, and Bacon is the author. But Mr. Donnelly's circumstantial argument in favor of the Baconian authorship seems to me so perfectly built up piece by piece, and so well supported by facts and dates, that I believe it will stand, even if the cipher should be proved to be a mere coincidence. Mr. Donnelly's argument, as I have said, is circumstantial, and it is built up piece by piece, and so well supported by facts and dates, that I believe it will stand, even if the cipher should be proved to be a mere coincidence. Mr. Donnelly's argument, as I have said, is circumstantial, and it is built up piece by piece, and so well supported by facts and dates, that I believe it will stand, even if the cipher should be proved to be a mere coincidence.

Special Correspondence of the United States Shipbuilding on the Modern—The Knighthood Bridge—The Fast Gun Races at West Point—The Naval School at Annapolis and Some of the Handsomest Midshipmen of the Complement.

New York, Aug. 28.—[Special Correspondence.]—It might be supposed on very short notice to get plenty to eat on the Bowery. Such is not the case. Beyond Broadway lies a foreign country. All its provisions of respectability are foreign to the Bowery. The haunts which have not given good food to the unemployed will seldom find their place to accommodate the customers who have money to spend. The cheap restaurants and lunch counters of the Bowery are not to be found in the guide books. They are not even known to the police. Such is the variety of the Bowery that it is impossible to say what is the most characteristic thing about it. Perhaps it is the number of pawnbrokers' shops. Perhaps it is the number of saloons. Perhaps it is the number of cheap lodging houses. Perhaps it is the number of missions. Perhaps it is the number of second hand clothing stores. Perhaps it is the number of cheap restaurants. Perhaps it is the number of cheap theaters. Perhaps it is the number of cheap museums. Perhaps it is the number of cheap concert halls. Perhaps it is the number of cheap dime museums. Perhaps it is the number of cheap shooting galleries. Perhaps it is the number of cheap dance halls. Perhaps it is the number of cheap shows of all kinds. Perhaps it is the number of cheap everything. Perhaps it is the number of cheap nothing. Perhaps it is the number of cheap something. Perhaps it is the number of cheap anything

WHY DO STOCKS DECLINE?

QUESTIONS THE STATE OF AFFAIRS IN WALL STREET.

The Opinion Expressed that the Recent Speculative Excess a Result of Good Organization in Consequence of Damage to the Corn Crop and a Stoppage of Railroad Construction—The Drop and Rally—All Over Four Hours—A History Day of the Situation.

New York, Aug. 27.—[Special.]—The Times, in its financial article, will say: The last week has been a busy one in Wall street and in our new Stock Exchange. The movements of the market have included those advantages of impending upside action of to-day's article. Prices have fallen sharply, and the market has had even a positively bearish tendency. Members of the financial columns of News and Advertiser carrying large lines of securities, have seen the necessity for more margin or more and have acted under it. Yesterday's bank statement showed the loans to have been contracted over $3,000,000. Much of the selling was for the short account, as it always is in such times, but in the last half of the week the selling seemed to be mainly of long stock, and the bears were then the buyers. The usual causes of this break or that operator being in trouble was then thrown into the air. Most all the various stocks have got into trouble to be mostly concerned in some pooling in the market. The Northern Pacific and Oregon securities were hardly in this case. Starting out with a few Southern stocks (the Richmond Terminal, and South also which were badly hurt by the disagreeable developments of the Reading Syndicate & Co.), Stock managers soon got thoroughly started by the time every one was heavily committed on collateral. Quick and therefore of carriage on the market [illegible] stocks of various grades [illegible] from [illegible] to [illegible] and [illegible] to [illegible] and [illegible] to [illegible] and
